The claim from which Clarence J. Berry and his wife, "the Bride of the Klondyke," took out $135,000. The photograph from which the picture is drawn was taken in April last. The water taken from the mine in the morning was frozen on the dump. This property is situated on El Dorado Creek a small stream running into Bonanza Creek, which is a tributary of the Klondyke, joining that stream a short distance above its juncture with the Yukon

Edward H. Hamilton, the Journal Special Commissioner, Tells of Riches Which Have No End-An Indian Legend Told to Tenderfeet. Where Is the Mysterious Creek of "Too Much Gold," Which Only the Eyes of Redskins Have Gazed Upon?

By Edward H. Hamilton,

Wash. Sept. 5.—"Where is too much gold?" that is the question agitating those who are facing north into the Yukon wastes. One who made a stake, want to California and married, and who is now returning has told the Indian legend which always goes with gold, and this has started the dreamers, theorists and the avarieous. Where is "too much gold?" According to the Bonanza Creek and Eldorado represented gold in smaller quantities, though it has been measured by the bucketful. But where in the unfathomed tumbra, hidden from all but Indian eyes, is "Too Much Gold" Creek, the mother placer of the yellow nuggets, a deposit so fabulously rich that the Indian, fearing the effect upon his white brothers, dare not golde them to that the Indian, fearing the effect upon his white brothers, dare not golde them to that the Indian, fearing the effect upon his white brothers, dare not golde them to that the Indian, fearing the effect upon his white brothers, dare not golde them to that the Indian, fearing the effect upon his white brothers, dare not golde them to that the Indian, fearing the effect upon his white brothers, dare not golde them to that the Indian, fearing the effect upon his white brothers, dare not golde down in the desert men have gone out to their dear the seeking the same chimers. of considerable moment to the market at the present time are the advance in sterling exchange and the heavy shipments of currency to the interior for crop moving. The currency movement has had a tendency to harden to a slight extent the money rate. Thus far this increase has been of little moment and the brokers have been able to make call loans at a purely nominal advance in interest rates. The legal tenders held by the pank show a decrease during last week of $4,008,000, which represents to a large extent the shipments of currency to the interior.

The advance in the rate for demand sterling exchange to 4.86% increases to 2 cents a pound the distance separating us from the gold importing point. Only tendays ago the rate was within 14 cents of that point. The advance is due to several causes, chiefly to the boom in stocks which has caused Londou to continue to unload her American securities here, also to the interruption in grain shipments and the backwardness of the cotton exports.

Rallroad earnings continue to show up remarkably well, with business constantly in casing. This cannot help but affect favorably the price of railroad shares, and aside from natural reactions the active stocks will undoubtedly sell higher. Rumors are rife of increased dividends in several properties. Principal among these is St. Paul. Last year its earnings exceeded 5 per cent and it paid 4 per cent in dividends. According to reports the earnings this year will exceed 6 per cent as and the natural inference upon which many traders are acting is that its dividend rate will be increased to 5 per cent at the directors' meeting on Thursday.

The combined property is directly represented by the capital stock of the Street Railway Company now in the hands of the Traction Company the real owners. There seems to be no reason stock which directly represents their property and at the same time be relieved from the now unnecessary burden of double administration and very heavy double taxation.

A blank proxy to vote in favor of this action and to give the necessary statutory consent is enclosed.

If you favor the course proposed and cannot attend the meeting personally, please sign the proxy, and either acknowledge it before a notary public or have a subscribing witness prove the signatures before a notary, using the printed form annexed to the proxy, and return the same to the Secretary of the Company at this office.
